SUNDAY
JANUARY 21, 1917

The Kingsland explosion—Wreckage surrounding the New Jersey plant of the Canadian Car Company, engaged in the manufacture of shells for Russia, the morning after it was wiped out by explosion and fire. The short posts were threaded with barbed wire, charged at night with electricity, to keep prowlers out. (International Film Service.)

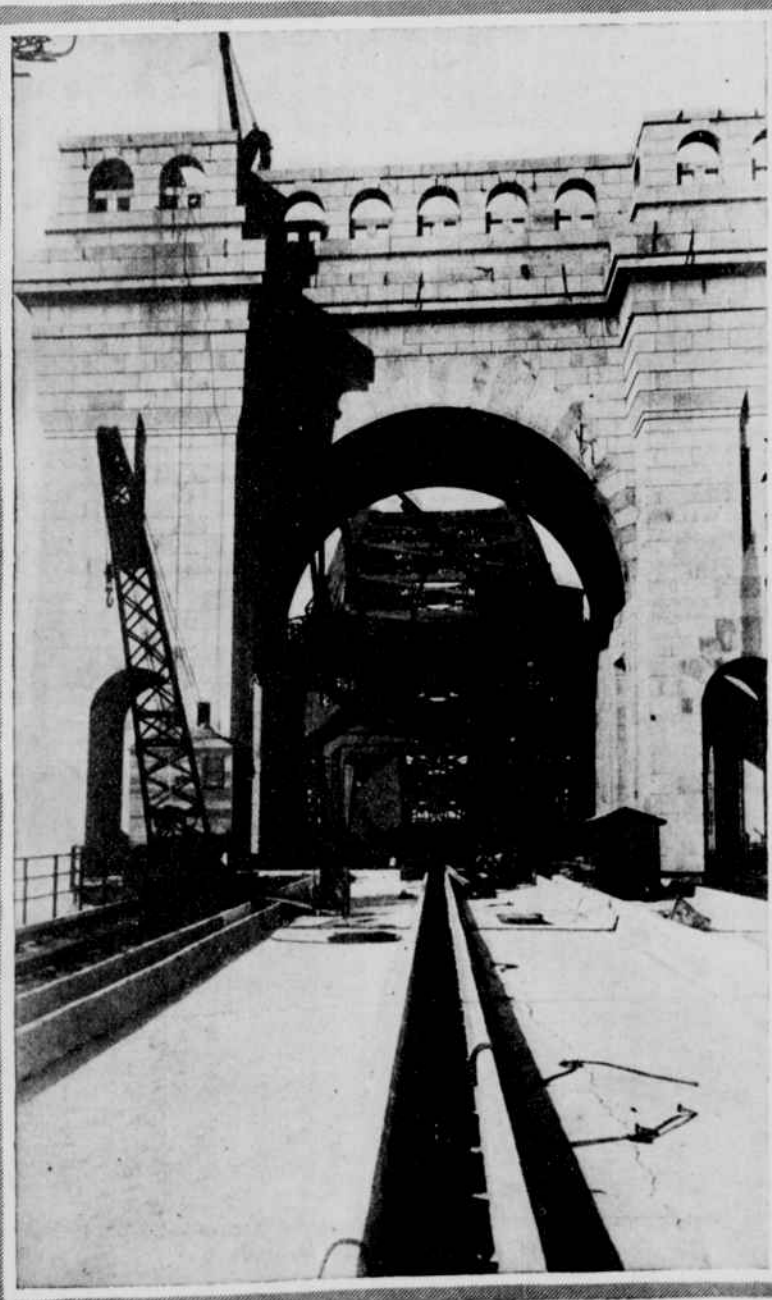

A three-inch shell, hurled by the Kingsland blast, penetrated the door of a dwelling half a mile away.

The Hell Gate Bridge, rapidly nearing completion. It connects New York City with Long Island and is the longest four-track railroad structure in existence. This is a view of one of the approaches and a part of the first span. The construction of the bridge was one of the notable engineering feats of the century. (Underwood & Underwood.)

The Du Pont powder plant at Haskell, N. J., destroyed by an explosion within thirty-six hours of the one at Kingsland. Photographers have not been permitted to approach the ruins. (International Film Service.)

The rulers of Germany and Austria, from one of the first photographs showing the Emperors together to reach this country since Charles I ascended the throne. They are visiting the German headquarters. The Kaiser is wearing a band of crepe about his arm in memory of Francis Joseph. (Underwood & Underwood.)
